The silver bill has proved alas much of a boon to the atry as a free coinage bill.

Those who not long ago were shouting "free comage or nothing" have lived to see that a free cein age bill was not the only one that could help us.

The silver men saw that free coinage could not be acquired at one dash, and so they framed a bill to send silver up, and thus move more guardedly on to tie Wall Street barricade.

The bill has had just the reverse effect from which the gold bugs predicted. It has not driven gold out of the country, but on the contrary, silver is going out and England has become a purchaser.

Silver is advancing with a slow and steady tread every day, and trade is feeling the quickening effects of the change.

When silver reaches par there will no longer be any well defined opposition to free coinage. It is certain to come, and perhaps before Congress adjourns.
